

Call for Nominations: Editor in Chief

The Journal of Nursing Measurement is seeking a qualified and distinguished editor in chief to review, edit, and select articles for publication in the peer-reviewed journal. The Journal of Nursing Measurement is published three times a year by Springer Publishing Company. The position is for a three-year, renewable term.

Candidates should be well-established researchers in areas related to the development and analysis, reliability, and validity of instrumentation in nursing. The ideal candidate also has sufficient experience serving on journal editorial boards and writing scholarly articles.

We are seeking an editor who is dedicated to the dissemination of information on instruments, tools, approaches, and procedures for measuring variables in nursing research, practice, and education.

Editors are expected to maintain and enhance the journal's reputation as a preeminent nursing measurement publication; be discerning, fair, and timely in the coordinating the peer review and disposition of submitted manuscripts; and work with the publishing staff and the journal's online manuscript and review system to ensure confidential and professional handling of manuscripts.

To nominate yourself or a colleague, please send a brief letter of interest summarizing your qualifications as well as a CV and three professional references to jcostello@springerpub.com
